Heston.-- John C. Hyde. There was little outgrowth of poetic feeling among the first settlers, their life in the wilderness being too hard for any display of sentiment, but there was great proclivity for rhyming by the middle of the century. and from that time our county abounded in writers of verse. This talent was stimulated by the establishment of a county newspaper. William Satterthwaite, classed among the "early poets of Pennsylvania," was probably the earliest, as well as the most distinguished of our domestic versifiers, but only a few of his effusions have survived him. He was born in England the early part of the eighteenth century, received a good classical education and settled in Pennsylvania while a young man. It is difficult to tell at what time he first came to Bucks county. He is said to have been a schoolteacher in England, and that one night a school girl, benighted on her way home, was offered the hospitality of his school house. The evening was long enough for their courtship and marriage. Satisfied of the false step-they had taken, they sailed for Pennsylvania in quest of better fortune...
