The Power of Zero: Book Two

Jack Horwood doesn't do families. Or Christmas. From the time his mother sold him to her pimp to the moment he walked out on the man he loved, Christmas has always been about change and painful choices. This year seems no different. Helping Daniel and Nico recover from their imprisonment and hunting down those responsible puts Jack in a frame of mind he doesn't want to inflict on anyone. Least of all Gareth and the tentative relationship they've started to rebuild.

But Gareth, for whom Christmas is all about new beginnings, won't let Jack take the easy way out. He makes him face his ghosts instead. Even when said ghosts invade their bedroom.

When Daniel's parents are found, Jack is determined to settle the matter without involving Daniel at all. But fate decrees otherwise, and it's Gareth who helps him finally understand that the strongest bonds are those forged together. Once he gets that, Jack can step up and make a decision designed to lay his ghosts to rest—for good.
