This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: ..."The Sea! the Sea!" but "White flags! White flags! The city is surrendered!" No, it was not surrendered, but the white flags were flying and we needed no urging to make, in quick time, the few intervening miles. The next day, on the 4th, of July, Vicksburg surrendered, and the wearied soldiers, worn out with toil and watching, hailed the dawn of a day of rest, the Sabbath of the siege. Glowing with victory, proud of its achievements, the army forgot, in the ardor of triumphant success, its labors, sufferings and losses, and extended to the subdued but brave defenders of Vicksburg such hospitality as the circumstances permitted, and the courtesies which are common only among friends. But sorely as it needed rest, the 21st Iowa was not yet destined to receive it. for on the next day its thrice decimated ranks, numbering now for effective service less than 200 men and officers, under command of Captain Crooke, marched with Sherman in pursuit of Johnston. On the 6th, it crossed Black River on pontoons; on the 7th, passed Edward's Station and the battle-ground of Champion's Hill, camping that night on the Clinton road in a pouring rain. The next day the march continued until near midnight. There was sharp firing in front, and the leading division fell in and skirmished with the enemy. Quoted from a soldier's correspondence. On the 10th, it arrived in front of Jackson, mustering only 158 men for duty, with only one Captain (Swivel) on duty with his company, all others, disabled by wounds or sickness, having been left behind. The country around Jackson is quite open, and the city much more difficult to approach by siege operations than was Vicksburg. There was constant skirmishing, but not many casualties, 1 being killed, 4 wounded, and 1 taken...
