The Patella, The Sea Urchin Needle, and A Cuppa' Java Ann D'Antonio

Where does a jaded New Yorker find relief for a bum knee in Hong Kong on a Sunday morning? Not from a Chinese apothecary shop, which would seem likely.

In The Patella, The Sea Urchin Needle, and A Cuppa' Java, the cure comes in the form of a strong cup of coffee, whence the traveler's real journey begins.

Ann D'Antonio turns a cuppa' Java into the vehicle for mystic and magic and wonder, transporting the reader to the realm of ancient Imperial China embodied in the old soul of a young barista at, of all places, McDonald's.

In few strokes she illustrates the power and rigor of the Very Short Story form, juxtaposing the streets of modern Causeway Bay against the exquisite courts of Cathay to the end of her quest for relief-- and what turns out to be knowledge-- in a most un-magical basement fast-food joint.
